Complementary feed (powder) for gestating bitches

Natural, hostile to worms feed supplement for gestating bitches

In the wild, animals instinctively consume plants that contain valuable bitter substances, saponins, and tannins in order to instinctively promote the natural balance in the intestines and avoid worm infestation through healthy nutritional expansion. Since our pets usually lack access to those plants, cdProtect Mommy can provide this important building block for a balanced diet to compensate for deficiencies in this context.

cdProtect Mommy contains a specially adapted herbal mixture for gestating bitches in order to create a worm-hostile ambience in the intestines of the gestating bitch without compromising the health of the puppies. A balanced intestinal milieu is particularly important in this phase, because intestinal health is of enormous importance for vitality, nutrient absorption and the general well-being of the bitch, and therefore also for the health of the puppies.

The coordinated combination was developed by veterinary practitioners and herbalists, and gently supports the digestive processes with natural ingredients and contributes to a stable internal balance.

Many parasitology experts and the Vet4Institut have long recommended checking the animal's worm infestation by regularly monitoring fecal samples (worm monitoring).

Composition: peat, carrot pomace, organic grated coconut, pumpkin seeds, oregano, rockrose

Analytical constituents: crude protein 7.5%, crude fat 23.2%, crude fiber 9.3%, crude ash 6.3%

Feeding recommendation: Add 1 g/5 kg body weight to the feed daily for 4 days. Repeat after 10-14 days, ideally feed at this rate until 14 days after delivery of the puppies. 1 half tsp. corresponds to ca. 1 g.
